CHECK YOUR TACK

With all the big money shows coming up the last thing you want to do is lose your run because your chicago screw in your headstall wasn't tightened up or a latigo had worn through. There's more to saddle care than just keeping it clean and tidy. You need to regularly check your saddle thoroughly for worn and damaged parts. These are problems you want to discover while you're on the ground at home, rather than in the saddle in the middle of a run.

When inspecting your saddle, pay particular attention to the straps – latigo (aka cinch strap), off billet, cinch connecting strap, stirrup leathers, and stirrup hobbles. These are the parts that can put you in a heap of trouble if they break.

If you see worn leather or damaged hardware, get them repaired or replaced immediately. Don't tempt fate by trying to get a few more rides out of them.
